The New York Americans finished their series with the western teams yesterday. They made it two out of three from the Browns, and for the first time won a home series. Against the western teams they lost the first game and won the last. The Athletics passed on the White Sox again and the Washingtons did the same to the Clevelanders. As the Boston won from Detroit, the visiting club were sent home with four defeats for the day. The Red Sox took fourth place from the White Sox, finally reaching the last division.

Today's Schedule.

New York in Washington. Boston in Philadelphia.

The New Yorks appeared before the press yesterday, not giving signs of chief anxiety over the series. Edward Sweeney, who was the most fearless of the wretched band of roving chameleons who fell upon the peaceful St. Louis tribe and sent it scattering, The New Yorks won 10 to 4, and for that reason it was a famous victory, being the second time this year that the bloodthirsty Knickerbocker savages, directed by Big Chief Frank the well-known and much-loved, have brought to sports to their extent. They beat the Detroit 10 to 2 on May 10, and that that predatory fact yesterday.

Returning to Sweeney, The Moose horned and hoisted his way to five hits. He stopped there because he was up only five times and the game was over. It was with tears in his eyes and an Alexander the Great frame of mind that he lunged his faithful battering ram across the field after the canary. His appointment that he couldn't get away with his hits, Sweeney was always in the vortex of the strife. He made two infield singles, two outfield singles, one outfield three bagger, batted in four runs, brought in one himself, stole a base while the pitcher was holding the ball and got in the way of a hot drive from Hartzell which all but knocked him down. After that he took pleasure in the poor old batters, read an article on the expense of Bill, had his nails manicured, his hands painted and went to bed. Some day for Sweeney.

Another epochal phase of the contest was that George McConnell stuck it out to the finish and won his game. He pitched steadily and well, easing up a bit in the ninth and feeling the effects of having to go through that. The New Yorks are beginning to be strong tapers, and they won the game in the last three innings in which they made only ten runs. Chance had them hustling and also had them shifting tactics so that a recourse to hitting in the eighth inning upset the St. Louis infield and laid the foundation for the biggest hog of runs.

McKinnon's fine play on Johnstone's ground prevented a possible win to the Bronx in the ninth, and on the New Yorks' side, after the first man had gone out the next three made single. There were three singles in succession without anybody reaching third. This odd angle took a punch to right by Cee Sweeney's safety to Brief, which not Birdie on the middle road, and a hit by Hartzell which struck Sweeney for the third.

Williams, a harsh slammer when he takes hold good, tripped in the second inning. Weller tried to peek who relaxed to Hartzell, who faced a difficult bound. McConnell was bucking up, and looked up badly. The ball went between his legs and Williams came on in. The Browns made another in the third on a shower of errors. Shenton, in the 10th, with wild and untidy hitting, rattled the batter on second. A foul sacrifice and Johnson made an outfit out. Johnson drew a throw on a delayed steal, but Shenton hopped that so closely that Johnson was run down without the former getting to score, and he was running for more than Shenton's speed. Pratt was passed, drew a walk, and McConnell on a steal and Shenton scored on Brown. It was a wild and bunt, and Johnson got to first. The crowd went to the Bronx.

The New Yorks tied the score in quick time. McConnell singled, Daniels was driven out by Austin. Weller walked, crosed to Shenton and Sweeney bashed a three-bagger. On the plate with a direct drive to center. The New Yorks added two in the seventh, which Daniels, Cee and the unpredictable Sweeney, fell upon, Mitchell and spilt the ball hill and batten.

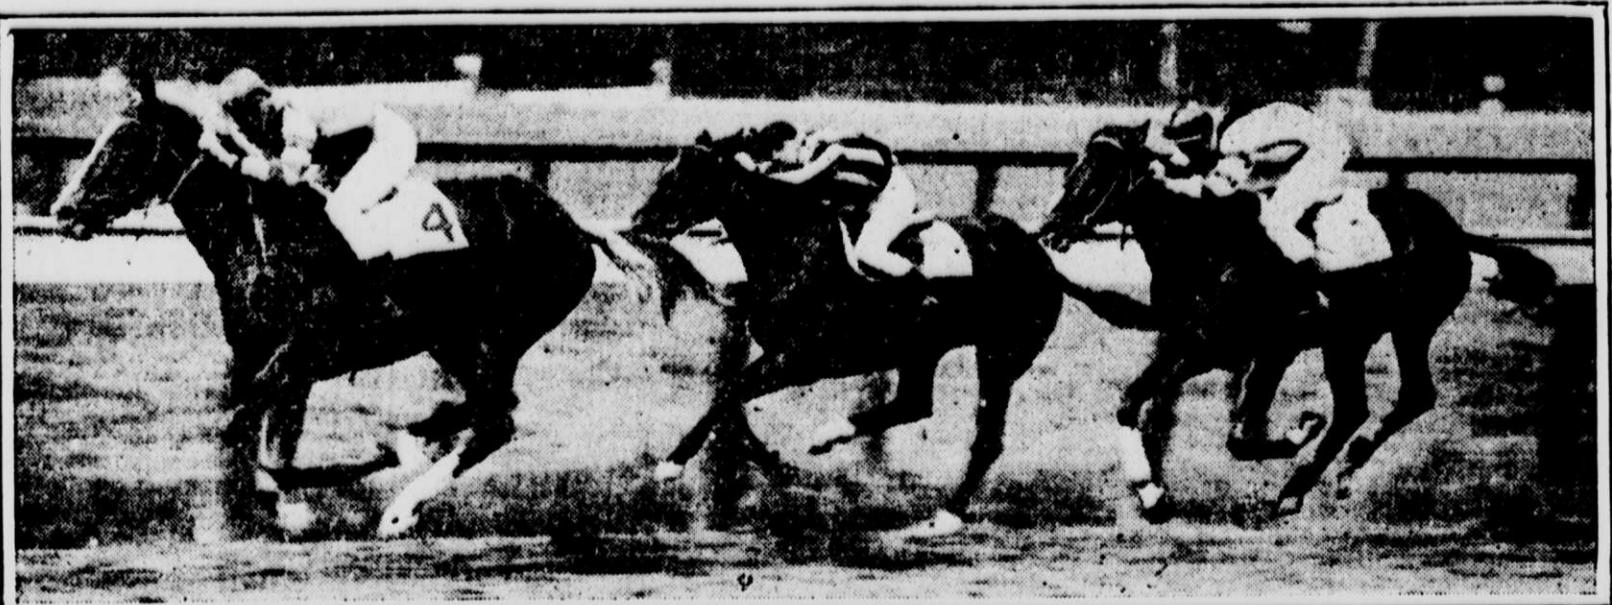

The crowning coroner was in the eighth.

Hartzell sacrificed and Peckin brought unfolding Ed, the Monarch of the Mass., to the plate with a direct drive to center. The New Yorks added two in the seventh, which Daniels, Cee and the unpredictable Sweeney, fell upon, Mitchell and spilt the ball hill and batten.
